

WOODRIDGE
PUBLIC LIBRARY

POEMS

2022 Adult Contest Entries

POEMS

2022 Contest Entries

WOODRIDGE PUBLIC LIBRARY POETRY CONTEST

WE ADMIRE THE CREATIVITY OF OUR PATRONS AND APPRECIATE THEIR GENEROSITY IN SHARING THEIR WRITING TALENT WITH THE WOODRIDGE COMMUNITY.

POEMS HAVE BEEN ENTERED IN FOUR AGE CATEGORIES, WITH A RIBBON AWARDED FOR EACH AGE GROUP, AND AN OVERALL CONTEST WINNER SELECTED.

THE RIGHTS TO EACH POEM SHARED HERE REMAIN WITH THE AUTHOR AND MAY NOT BE REPRODUCED OR COPIED WITHOUT THE AUTHOR'S PERMISSION.

ADULT ENTRIES

2022 CONTEST

Fred Bonanno	Angel in Racine
Lynn Panepinto	Behind Closed Doors
Ana Madden	Woven Memories
Paul Engel	Empty Swing
Sabrina Kahren	Eternity Sits Sweetly
Patricia Sidlauskas Hiscock	Forever
Fred Bonanno	Funeral for my Past
Syreeta Williams	I want to be a dancer
Delia LaPorta	Life is a Beach
Patricia Sidlauskas Hiscock	My Grandmother
Delia LaPorta	Night
Karen Hurley Kuchar	On the News
Paul Engel	Red Song
Karen Hurley Kuchar	Redbud
Colleen Morgan	Rest
Phyllis Sinclair	Roses do Not Purr
Shannon Huang	Surtr
Syreeta Williams	Tangerine Sun
Angelica Del Pilar	Trials and Joys

ANGEL IN RACINE

by Fred Bonnano

On a hazy warm midsummer day
A chance meeting came my way

On a lonely street which bears no name
Out of nowhere she came

She spoke so softly and so calm
As she placed her flower pedals in my palm

Why was I the chosen one?
To meet an angel in Racine

How could she fly with no wings?
To deliver the message that she brings

My journey from God is still unclear
But I faithfully go with no fear

She seemed so weary and yet so strong
But I knew our time would not be long

She gave no name only her mission
I tried to speak but could only listen

I felt a peace I never felt before I felt a connection even more

I close my eyes and look to heaven as the clock strikes eleven eleven

I wondered how I fit in this plan
She said because you understand

Is it real, is it a dream?
To meet an angel in Racine

When her deep piercing eyes met mine
I knew I crossed the forbidden line

The heavens seemed much closer that day
But I knew she could not stay

She was gone as quick as she came But her memory will always remain

Behind Closed Doors

by Lynn Panepinto

No one knows the story of her.

She stays hidden behind closed doors,

With shattered dreams and torn hope,

Leaving her without regard for life.

Looking out the window she carelessly lifts another bottle to her mouth.

Silent screams jar her; for a temporal moment she's shaken from within.

Why...why do I continue this way time and time again?

The yoke that started off small and light

Is now overwhelming, heavy, and tight.

No one knows the story of her.

Why won't she come out from behind closed doors?

Contemplating the end and how painless it could be.

Contemplating life and how endless it seems.

Looking out the window she intentionally lifts another bottle to her mouth.

Drowning out the silent screams and for a temporal moment she's wrestling within.

Why...why do I quit and start back over and over again?

The yoke has grown unmanageable, almost out of control.

Feeding guilt and shame that now have their own role.

No one knows the story of her.

Shackled and trapped behind closed doors.

Wary of getting help, judgement looming up ahead.

Fearful of staying hidden, ending up dead.

Looking out the window she removes the bottle from her mouth.

The silent screams now stop and for a temporal moment she is calm within.

Why...why do I let this shame tell me to lower my chin?

The yoke has a power that seems to seep through my pores,

Time to let it go and come out from behind closed doors.

FOREVER

by Patricia Sidlauskas Hiscock

Thank you God
For the warmth
Embracing me
As I leave
The comfort
Of my dreams
To live one more day
To face
The morning light
To breathe the air
You have given me
When I thought
My last breath
Was gone
Thank you God
For the cardinal
Waiting for me
On the well aged fence Waiting with a Silent song to tell me Loved ones live on

Surtr
by Shannon Huang

for all the hybrids

“But where are you really from?”

with elevated heart rate & furrowed brow your stab at cross-cultural relativism will make Lovecraft run for hills I as monster & sinew stretch & spine uncurling & magma rising & fangs baring & claws clenching & grasping & reaching forwards blindly—blindly to that far lip of the rocky spur & blindly across the disorienting blur of slip space & blindly ignoring the boiling lake of fir beneath for bait, hung high centered in between is duly eaten. The world tips madly & it all splashes & sinks with a gurgle & a moment passes & then another until, from the other side I still & jaws creaking open impossibly wide & as Frankenstein-fire-serpent-horror-thing I roar quietly in response

I am from here

I am from here

2022

Trials and Joys

by Angelica Del Pilar

Come pick up your cross...
College wrecked my mental health.
I was not ready for it
In the slightest.
On top of grief I had coming into it,
It was just different from high school.
Classes rotate days, so people rotate.
I never really had any friends.
Loneliness is a beast, a dragon
That is almost impossible to slay.

Why does no one tell you adulthood is lonely?

I became worse and worse as College dragged on. It seemed Like everyone else was getting jobs,
Traveling,
Making memories
Buying their own place-And here I was Working part time, still at home,
All my money going to bills.
I became jealous of strangers, coworkers, and Cousins alike.

Jealousy consumed me like a snake devouring its prey.

And follow me...
At my lowest point, I knew Something had to give.
That's when my heart Kept telling me to Go to church.

I resisted for a while Since I didn't grow up with Religion and had no intention of Starting.
But
One day I stopped by A Catholic event for the free food And met someone who Led me to God.

God saved me
From my worst parts.
My jealousy went away
After 5 or 6 months.

My anxiety is still Present
But I'm learning to Live with it Through God's
Grace and hope.

Woven Memories

by Ana Madden

My memories are woven colors on your wings, watching you made my heart sing.
A bittersweet melody of love once lived, coupled with sadness of what we'll miss.

I take comfort that you will live on in me, as sure as the sun slips away in the sea.
I take each day at a time for now, knowing the sun will shine again somehow.

Fly, my dear butterfly, fly until I see you no more.
Although you have changed, I have changed too, from our memories, and my love for you.

Rest

By Colleen Morgan

It's not so bad
this aging thing.
When I look in the mirror
sometimes,
I think, tomorrow the bags will be smaller I didn't get much sleep.

But
they're still there, along with the drying skin and peachfuzz cheeks.

Ok. Tonight I sleep, at nine I think.
Maybe for the whole week.
That should do it It's the rest I need, that's all.

Are my cheeks drier today?
And what's with this hair?
And why are my hands so scratchy?
This morning I snagged my best scarf.

It's that aging thing
I guess.
I just keep thinking
It's the rest I need.

But...
When I look in the mirror
sometimes,
I think,
Whose body is this anyway?
I don't recognize her.

Redbud

by Karen Hurley Kuchar

Mother's Day tense with expectation.
Will they call?
Send a gift? I remember those early adult years, life consumed with concerns so removed from the home left behind and people whose love
I took for granted.

I stand now in-between—knowing my mother's pain, helpless against the wave of my own.

Generational misses repeat themselves.

And then from their father a surprise gift,
a redbud,
my favorite tree.
Spindly yet sizeable,
early spring blossoms of impossible pink hug branches out to each twig.
We plant it together in the backyard, roots deep in this nurturing earth.
Its yearly blooms reminders of love
we can take for granted.

On the News

by Karen Hurley Kuchar

I saw babies today
Sick babies tethered to tubes, held in mothers' arms

I was reminded of those days with Lily when we watched our newborn grandchild fight for her life while she slept

The babies I saw today lay on a concrete floor of a basement make-shift bomb shelter

Exhausted mothers by their side Tearful, they share their pain, their fear, their lives upended

Their own personal crisis now embedded in the destruction of war, testing the limits of human endurance

Lily is 10 now, she doesn't want to hear about those painful weeks we still hold in our hearts

I can only hope that someday the same will be true for the babies in the bomb shelter

Life is a Beach

by Delia LaPorta

Strolling on the glistening sand Hoping to meet my love, my mate Scoping up a shell in my hand Knowing that He will be late Placing the shell near my ear

Still on the lookout for him

Ocean sound is all I hear

Drawn to it, on a whim

Wading into the water

Glancing over my shoulder

Taking steps I begin to falter Realizing I am getting older

Falling into the cold sea

The only one laughing is He Night

by Delia LaPorta

Whispering cold winds Branches swaying in moonlight Create frightful shadows

Roses do Not Purr
by Phyllis Sinclair

They wrap their slender silk necks with pale green thorns and cover their lips with the most outrageous vamp red lipstick.

They know how to choose perfume and suck honey out of rainwater.

I want to be a dancer

by Syreeta Williams

I want to be a dancer.

Dancing is like ribbons, bows and bright colors to me.

It's kind of a mystical talent or gift you see.

I want to be a dancer. I want to be lifted up.

I want to jump, leap, stand and rise on my toes.

I want to have the perfect portrait like a super model pose.

I want to spin, waltz and plunge. I want to leap, swing, dip and lunge.

I want to twist, jig and jive. I want to step, spin, twist and glide. I want to dance, move and groove. I want to groove like nobody else groove.

I want be a dancer, and it is not because of the way that I move. I want to be a dancer because I just bought myself some new dancing shoes. I want to be a dancer!

Tangerine Sun

by Syreeta Williams

The tangerine sun shines through a small yellow stained glass window

The green forest tree limbs lay beside a glitzing dusty shoe trail

Above little country houses with covered chimney tops blanketed sheets of winter snow slowly melts away

The calming warm winds of spring stand with opened arms to welcome

A new season

A new morning

A new second

A new day

A new task

A new dream

A new purpose

In time that ticks and tock to welcome the rising Tangerine Sun

FUNERAL FOR MY PAST

by Fred Bonnano

I attended a funeral dressed in black
I abruptly left but something called me back

I had to say goodbye
I had to let it die

The time is now, it cannot wait
It held me back, but it is not too late

It had its grip around my throat Left for dead, barely afloat

It dragged me down and gave me no hope
At times it felt I was at the end of my rope

I was held prisoner in my mind Eyes were open, but I was blind

For so many years I held it inside
I lied
I denied
In some ways I died

Time to look in the mirror and let it go
Time to let my inner seed grow

Seeking guidance seeking direction
This will be my resurrection Never question what could have been
That will steal your soul from within

The dragon has been slayed
No more am I afraid

As I lower the coffin lid This forever nightmare, I am finally rid

I am free at last, I am free at last I held a funeral for my past

Eternity Sits Sweetly

by Sabrina Kahren

Eternity sits sweetly,
within tonight and tomorrow.

A vision lost to the haze of a too busy world.

Interconnection lost in overconnection, when no one sees with their own eyes.

So eternity is lost in the quest to do more,
and sincerest moments drift by because we cannot slow down and just hold them.

Empty Swings

empty swings
pushed by the breeze — granddaughters

by Paul Engel

Red Song

the cardinal's red song in a gray sky

by Paul Engel

My Grandmother

by Patricia Sidlauskas Hiscock

I picked up the apron and spilled
All the dark rye crumbs from the bread
You brought from overseas
Long before my time Only then did I see
Your freedom. An apron Full of crumbs from Another world
A world I never knew I saw you grate potatoes With knuckles raw producing Potato pancakes and kugelis
With bacon and globs of sour cream
The old farmhouse where you tucked me in
With your quilt and heated bricks
And in the morning I would stumble Down the attic stairs knowing You were waiting with blueberry pancakes in The cast iron pan on the old wood stove
And now the apron ties wrap around My heritage of faith, family, hard work and love Brought here from across the seas